MENTAL HEALTH

Introduction

Many New Zealanders find Mental Health a sensitive issue, but it is an aspect of ordinary life, affecting many people. It has been of concern to governments since the 1850s. Some records have been created by government departments or agencies, but most by institutions. These were established to house (if not adequately deal with or treat) the individuals deemed, for whatever reason, to be mentally ill.

The Health Department archives held in the Wellington Office include a number of records for mental health institutions throughout New Zealand, 1853-1960. Patient and some staff records for particular institutions are held in the regional offices of Archives New Zealand.

Many of the records held are indexes and registers which include limited information. A considerable number of individual patient files are to be found at Archives New Zealand offices, but not all of them by any means. Other patient files which have survived are likely to be held in hospitals or in the record centres of Health Boards.

Access

Access to most mental health records is restricted because they include personal information, often about more than single individuals. ARCHWAY listings of the records (see www.archives.govt.nz), give specific information about access.

Background

No provision was made for the mentally ill by the Crown Colony government in the 1840s. If such people had no relatives to look after them, or they became too much of a problem, they could be placed only in gaols. In the 1850s and 1860s Provincial Governments set up a number of institutions, known as 'Lunatic Asylums', to house and possibly treat people with serious mental disorders.

'Reports on the Lunatic Asylums in New Zealand' (AJHR 1873 H-23) showed the following asylums and numbers of inmates:

| | |
|--|-----------------------------|
| Auckland Provincial Lunatic Asylum | 125 inmates at 31/12/1872 |
| New Plymouth Lunatic Asylum | 2 inmates at 31/1/1873 |
| Napier Lunatic Asylum | up to 7 inmates during 1872 |
| Karori Lunatic Asylum, Wellington | 27 inmates at 1/1/1873 |
| Hokitika Lunatic Asylum | 45 inmates at 31/12/1872 |
| Sunnyside Lunatic Asylum, Christchurch | 123 inmates at 13/5/1873 |
| Dunedin Lunatic Asylum | 174 inmates at 31/3/1873 |

Other institutions were created later. Some changed their names or sites over time. The institutions have variously been called Lunatic Asylums, Mental Hospitals and Psychiatric Hospitals.

Administration

For many years an Inspector of Asylums administered mental health institutions, not the Health Department.

- Central government took over the administration of Lunatic Asylums from provincial governments in 1876. From 1882 the Colonial Secretary [IA Internal Affairs] was responsible for asylums. Resident Magistrates had the power to commit people to asylums.
- In 1904 the Inspector of Asylums, Dr Duncan Macgregor, began applying elsewhere the 'villa hospital' pattern, first used at Seacliff near Dunedin.
- In 1908 a Mental Hospital Department was set up. Under the Mental Defectives Amendment Act 1928 it became the Mental Health Department.
- The Mental Defectives Act 1911 defined six classes of 'mentally defective person' for whom a degree of oversight, care or control was deemed necessary. Only a Magistrate could order people to be received or detained by Mental Hospitals. The act put institutions under an Inspector-General.
- In 1948 the Mental Health Department came under the Health Department as the Mental Hygiene/Health Division within the Department of Health (which itself had been created in 1900).

HOLDINGS

The holdings, at the different Archives offices, on Mental Health (patients and staff), which are most useful to family historians, are listed on the following pages.

Understanding the Records

- A Register was usually the primary mental health record, giving an admission number and usually a patient file number, and providing dates of admission, discharge/death, etc.
- Alphabetical Indexes to Registers were sometimes created to make it easier to find individuals in the registers. These may be in the Registers or separate volumes.
- Patient (case) files were created by staff in the institutions.
- There may be different groups of records for different types of patients.

Access Restrictions

Access to many of the mental health records is restricted by the hospitals or health boards who deposited the records with Archives New Zealand. Access permission is to be gained from a variety of agencies, often Health Boards, and some are listed with the records on the following pages.

The listings of the records in ARCHWAY, Archives New Zealand's electronic finding aid, give more specific information about access restrictions. ARCHWAY can be accessed online through our website: www.archives.govt.nz

New Zealand-wide records

Archives New Zealand in Wellington holds registers of patients in Lunatic Asylums, Mental Hospitals, etc, for the whole of New Zealand from 1853 to 1960.

Separate indexes are held for the period 1853-1951 and the later registers have indexes included. The Indexes and Registers give Patient File numbers.

Access

Researchers may request Indexes or Registers (see below) in the Wellington Reading Room. Once retrieved, Archives staff will look in the Index or Register for the name asked for by the researcher. If the name is located, the researcher must contact the Ministry of Health to request an access approval letter. The contact address is:

Director-General
Ministry of Health
PO Box 5013
Wellington, New Zealand

Once the access letter is obtained and brought or sent to Archives New Zealand in Wellington, Archives staff will provide a transcript of the relevant register entry. Indexes and registers, which give information about many different patients, cannot themselves be issued to researchers unless the access letter specifies that.

Every researcher using Health Department archives must sign a copy of the declaration agreed upon between the Department and Archives New Zealand. These may be obtained from Archives staff.

Additional restriction: Before any research based on Health Department archives is published it must be submitted to the Director-General of Health (or representative) for approval.
